5. The M/s. IFSD has obtained 50 marks. The IFSD's proposal demonstrates a mixed-methods approach, integrating qualitative and quantitative methods to explore human rights enforcement mechanisms in Pakistan comprehensively. The design effectively addresses various factors influencing human rights, enhancing the validity of findings. Moreover, the work plan is detailed and structured over a 20-week timeline. The deliverables are clearly defined and aligned with project objectives, ensuring efficient project completion. However, IFSD's proposal does not contain a theoretical framework, nor does it provide a literature review.
6. The M/s. PPRI has obtained 59 marks. PPRI in its proposal outlines a qualitative research approach to delve deeply into the enforcement mechanisms of human rights in Pakistan. It adopts a System Theory framework, aiming to analyze the complex interactions among stakeholders involved in enforcement. This approach is suitable for understanding the multifaceted nature of human rights enforcement in a diverse socio-political context like Pakistan. The literature review identifies existing gaps in research drawing from diverse sources, including international frameworks and regional contexts, providing a comprehensive background for the study. Lastly, the proposal presents a detailed workplan with specific timelines covering a period of 90 days.
7. Both M/s. IFSD and PPRI have appropriate and relevant experience in conducting researches on human rights, as evidenced by the publications of both lead researchers and research associates which in their totality exceeds 20 publications.
8. The M/s Zekab has not obtained any points in the technical evaluation as they did not submit a research proposal.
9. Consequently, both M/s. IFSD and PPRI having obtained passing marks meet the technical evaluation criteria, and will continue to the next stage of submitting their financial bids. M/s. Zekab, on the other hand, has not met the technical evaluation criteria, and therefore does not qualify to proceed to the next phase of financial bid evaluation.
